Chairman Has Report for Municipal Ownership Investigators.

Chairman Melville E. Ingalls, of the "Committee of Twenty-one," appointed under the auspices of the Civic Federation to investigate nunicipal ownership, issued a call yesterday for a meeting of the committee in this city November 27, to arrange for the investigation,

The committee was appointed by the Public Ownership Commission, appointed about three nonths ago to investigate municipal ownership in this country and Europe. Mr. Ingalls is chairman of the board of directors of the Big Four Railroad, of Cincinnati. The other members are heads of corporations, business men, college professors and presidents of unions and trades which municipal ownership would affect. John Mitchell is vice-president of the committee.

For some time a sub-committee has been at work preparing a report on the scope and methods of the convention. It issued the following statement yesterday:

The report provides that a considerable num

The report provides that a considerable number of plants of varying sizes, locations and character be first visited in the United States and a careful investigation made by expert accountants and engineers into every detail of management. Not only will the public reports be considered, but the actual working of the plant in all its phases will be investigated by competent and impartial men.

This investigation having been completed and the detail work having been put well under way, the committee will visit Burope, proceeding first to England and later to the Continent. Expert secountants and engineers will accompany the same careful, thorough and comprehensive examination made into every phase of the subject. The purpose of the investigation will be to determine and record the facts; opinions are to be eliminated. Every essential point will be treated and ample time allowed for the collection of data, to the satisfaction of the committee. The report of the committee on plan and scope, which outlines in detail the subjects to be considered and the questions to be answered, contains about twelve thousand words.

The important points and those likely to produce the most discussion are the effects of private and municipal ownership upon municipal politics, the appointment and removal of employes the election of city officiais, municipal politics, character of service rendered, cost of service, method of assessing charges, economy of management, rapidity with which improvement in service and methods has been made, the financial results and the effect upon the debt and taxation of the city.

The committee of twenty-one is made up of the taxation of the city. The committee of twenty-one is made up of the

CENTRAL CHINA NOTES.

Hankow, Ootober 14, 1976. The seports of the German trade statement pubitered in Berlin are being read carefully by those of other nationalities in the Far East. The statement with regard to shipping and taking the place of the British is not taken seriously by those who are here and know the actual conditions. The German steamers plying between Hankow and Shanghad take freight at cut rates, and even then are herer vary busy. Passengers are carried at all kinds of fares, according to the amount of influence which the individual has with the agent's office. The lines are subsidized, and it is probable that if at all.

There is no doubt, however, that the Germans are doing a good export and import business, and that it is stendily increasing. They pay attention to business, even to its details. Their consulates work to the extreme for the interests of business and back up their people, whether right or wrong. They adopt no halfway policy with the Chinese, but make up their minds what they want, demand it and if it is not forthcoming at once threaten to bring gunboats to enforce their demands. With the few gunboats which they have in Eastern waters they make a good showing and keep them moving about so well that they give one the impression that they maintain a large fleet here. The new German postoffice in Shanghai, just completed, is the finest postoffice building in the Far East, and was built either with the view of impressing the Chinese or with the idea that the impressing the Chinese or with the idea that the Germans will need large accommodations in the near future. The new German consulate is the most imposing consulate building in Hankow, netwithstanding the fact that it has on its top the American eagle instead of the Prussian eagle. Perhaps the style of easie is specially latended as a hint to Americans that the Germans actually mean to do what they have told the Chinese during the boycott they intended to do; that is, to take the place of the Americans in all the trade which has been done by Americans.

The Americans in China will receive with some shxisty the telegraphic news to the effect that the Cabinet has decided to make changes in the Exusion Act. Many will trust that the changes will be merely in the regulations concerning the carryin out of the act, and not with the spirit of it.

The great difficulty for many years has been the condition of the United States consulates. Let the government place good men in the consulates, considerion. scientions men who will do their work properly and men who have sufficient ability and knowledge of human nature, who can work for the in-terest of Americans and the American government, and not only for their own, and matters will soon put themselves in proper condition.

The consuls should not be changed too often, for it takes even a good man at least two years to become acquainted with the Chinese ways and the manners and ordinary customs of the people. But Amusements.

for a man who has been in China, say two years, and kept his eyes open, there is no difficulty in having matters so that he can ascertain easily and correctly the identity and occupation of any Chinese who applies to him for a passport to the United States, either as a merchant or a student, or perhaps as a visitor. A man of any means is a man of family, and families are so well located and have so many connections that it is a comparatively easy matter for any consul to ascertain whether a person applying to him is the man he represents himself to be or not. The same could not be said of the coolie class, who have not such strong ties and associations, but drift about somewhat.

There have been incidents of interest in Central

China during the last week. The representative for the Hong Kong and Shanghai Banking Corporation, at Peking, E. G. Hillier, has been in Hankow closing the arrangements for the loan by the bank to the Chinese government, in order to enable it to pay the amount of cash agreed upon to the Morgan American syndicate for the return of the concession for building the railway from Wuchang Morgan American syndicate for the return to Canton. The contract reads as between the Viceroy of Hupeh and Hunan, Chang Chih Tung, as representing the Peking government, the contract being ratified by it, and, on the other side, the Governor General of Hong Kong, as representing the British government, for the interests of the bank. The arrangements in Wuchang were put bank. The arrangements in vacinary were part through largely by the assistance of the British consul general at Hankow. E. H. Fraser, who negotiated directly with the Viceroy. Apart from the matter of the loan, is the special clause in the agreement which stipulates that no material for the railway shall be purchased elsewhere than in Greet Britain or Japan, and no engineers or attaches of the engineering department shall be employed other than British subjects or Japanese without the consent of the parties making the loan. This scheme will without doubt greatly advance the interests of Great Britain and Japan in Central China, and was as wise a piece of business as was the American operation with regard to this same project a failure. The whole action of the American syndicate from start to completion has given a setback to American trade interests many times greater than a dozen boycotts could effect, and from which the reputation of America as a business country will not recover short of a generation.

The Chinese government, and especially the Vicethrough largely by the assistance of the British

The Chinese government, and especially the Vice The Chinese government, and especially the Vice-roy of Hupeh, Chang Chih Tung, has been anxious ever since he heard that there was to be a Chi-nese newspaper in Hankow conducted under Brit-ish protection to stop it. He has tried in various ways to accomplish this move, but has on a num-ber of occasions failed. On October 5, however, the Chinese Editor of "Tsuo Pao" wrote and published an article commenting on the explosion at the railway station in Peking, and the Chinese government decided that the article contained seditious libel, and made a request that the Editor be arrested by the British authorities and turned over to them for trial. This action was opposed in court by the newspaper company, but the censul to overruled the objection and stated that, according to the treaty between Great Britain and China and the law as it now stands, that for all ports outside of Hong Kong and Shanghai, if the Chinese authortites charge seditious libel, the British government must arrest the man and turn him over to the Chinese government for trial, and it is not within the jurisdiction of the British court to pass even upon the question as to whether the article alleged contains libel or not.

The British consul, sitting as judge of the Consular Court, stated that he had received an assurance from the Viceroy stating that no torture of any kind would be inflicted upon the prisoner whether found guilty or not, and that in event of his conviction the most severe penalty to be inflicted would be imprisonment. The editor was turned over to the Chinese, and he was taken to Wuchang for trial. There is much interest taken in the case, not only by the foreigners, but by the Chinese themselves. The Chinese official system in Hupeh is honeycombed with men who, while holding positions under the government, are really opposed to it, and are only waiting for the day when there shall be some form of uprising that will bring about a change. Some of these officials are not extremely careful with regard to stating their views. It was stated by a Chinese official close to the Viceroy that both the British and Chinese governments were very angry that the "Tsuo Pao" was able to publish the news of the railway agreement just as soon as it was made, and that this fact accounted in a large measure for the willingness of the British authorities to find a reason for turning over the Editor to the Chinese. It is a fact, however, that nothing can take place in any of the yamens which cannot be learned for a small sum of money by any person understanding the proper method of securing it.

The investigation of the life insurance companies in New-York has probably had the effect of causing the New-York Life Insurance Company to close its Hong Kong and Canton branch offices and to cut down the working staff in both Shanghai and Hankow. The large expense which has been incurred during the last two or three years, coupled with the small volume of business secured, would not look well to the policyholders at home. The companies are probably glad of the excuse of the American boycott as their reason for retrenchment. The British consul, sitting as judge of the Consu
